But the truth is that His Majesty is as cold as the tramontana (north wind), and flies from all occasion of sinning even in thought.f It was a wonderful galaxy of fair ladies, besides all the great nobles, which was gathered together at Naples to do honour to their feudal lord. But His Majestys first and most pressing desire appears to have been to meet the far-famed Countess of Fondi, who had so narrowly escaped the Corsair raid. Miccio, Vita di Pedro de Toledo. t Letter to Monsignor di Carpi, December 28, 1535. A most gracious invitation was at once sent, praying that the Signora Giulia Gonzaga Colonna would vouchsafe to visit the Emperor at Naples. From so high a prince, her feudal lord, this was, in fact, a command which the lady had no choice but to obey. Isabella, who, since her return from the Abruzzi, had found the Court at Fondi terribly dull, was delighted to accompany her sister-in-law, and with a retinue suitable to their rank, the two ladies travelled to Naples about the middle of December. Here they were received with great honour, and at the splendid Court held by the Viceroy, Don Pedro de Toledo, for the glory of his prince, Isabella Colonna was quite in her element. Giulia had the pleasure of meeting many of her old acquaintances, amongst whom were the charming sisters, Maria d Aragona, married to the Marchese del Vasto, Vittoria Colonnas adopted son (her husbands nephew), and the bright and high-spirited Giovanna d Aragona, the wife of Vittorias brother, Ascanio Colonna. Neither of their husbands were very satisfactory; Maria had a rival whom Alfonso d Avalos preferred, but his wife was too proud to make any complaint....
