Not illustrated. 1901 Excerpt: ...of foods, medicines, and poisons, practical or Galenical pharmacy, and legislation relating to pharmacy. (Text-books mostly Spanish. Fresenius is used for analytical chemistry.) FACULTY OF PHILOSOPHY AND LETTERS Metaphysics; Greek; universal history; general literature. FACULTY OF SCIENCES. Mathematical analysis; geometry; mineralogy and botany; general chemistry; lineal and topographical drawing. It will be seen that the faculties of philosophy and letters and of sciences are much weaker than the others, particularly the faculty of sciences, which contains only a small proportion of the subjects which should be expected in a modern university.1 1 Yet in the account of education prepared for a Philippine exhibition lit Madrid, in 1887. as part of the material of education tit the university are mentioned a museum of natural history of 5,174 specimens, mostly zoological and mineralogical, with a special library, and provided with the necessary apparatus; a physical cabinet, containing what was then new physical apparatus, such as the Gramme dynamo-electrical machine, with a Serrin regulator, a Carre machine, a phonograph worked by a small tiraninc machine, a telephone, electro-magnets, besides maps and drawings sufficient for use in lectures. A new chemical laboratory, a dissecting room, and a botanical garden are alx described, which would indicate that practical scientific work must be carried on, or, at any rate, that opportunity was offered for such work. The explanation of the absence of scientific studies given in the above-quoted work is that there was no special call for them in the islands. The attendance at the university in the academic year 1895-9G was divided among the faculties as follows: The amount and quality of the instruction given at the ...
